A. When it comes to training centers, this concept is important because the client will be working directly with one supplier. This saves time, money and energy. It is very convenient to communicate with only one manager assigned to the company, who will help immediately with any questions related to any simulator. There is no need to search among the many contacts for the exact company from which you purchased a particular simulator. One supplier is responsible and guaranteed for all devices and responds promptly to issues that need to be resolved quickly. Moreover, buying a full set of simulators from one supplier, you significantly save your budget, since our company provides big discounts to customers who purchase the Complete Training Package.

If it is talking about airlines, then such a concept is important because, first of all, the company does not need to think about where to send pilots to trainings, and where to send flight attendants.

We also help with recruiting, provide assistance to the personnel department of the airline: recruiting and training flight and cabin crews.

Moreover, we are building a training center directly at the location of the airline's base, this eliminates travel costs for personnel and since this is a long-term project, we give a good discount for airlines.
